

ABSTRACT

A method for producing a biological material composition of animal, non-human origin, especially as feed or food, is described. The method includes an aggregation of stem cells from differentiated exocrine glandular tissue of an animal organism to organoid bodies, and a preparation of the material composition from the organoid bodies.